MULTIPLE TRANSMISSION COMMUNICATIONS METHOD AND DEVICE

Abstract

A first peer successively transmits a predetermined number of more than one identical instances of a data block to a second peer. The second peer receives at least two of the predetermined number of identical instances of the data block. The second peer combines more than one corrupted received data block to form a complete instance of the original data block.